Bob Graham Poses Questions for Obama on Saudis and 9/11

July 16th, 2013 • 10:18 AM

In a Miami Herald op-ed [1] posted July 13, former U.S. Senator Bob Graham takes up President Obama's call for "a national debate on liberty and security in post-9/11 America," pointedly saying to Obama: "I welcome this call, but the difficulties with your proposal include: how to have a debate on a subject you don't know exists; and how to have a debate if the facts necessary to engage in an informed discussion are withheld?"

Former Sen. Bob Graham (R-FL) raises the unsettled questions of 9/11.

Graham notes that there are some events around the 9/11 attacks "that go to the heart of the issue;" these took place in Sarasota, Florida, and raise questions such as: "could the 19 hijackers have conducted such a complex operation alone?" and "Did the terrorists have the support of a network, perhaps directed by elements of a foreign nation state?" He goes through the circumstances where a prominent Saudi family was in contact with a number of the 9/11 hijackers, then fled the country shortly before the 9/11 attacks — and the FBI then lied about it, and continues to withhold information.

Graham then poses a series of questions for Obama about the hiding of information and the functioning of the FBI and other agencies, which include: "Why have the Saudis been treated in a distinctively different manner than other nationalities?" He goes on: "This stark difference was highlighted after the Boston marathon bombing in April. Within hours of the massacre, the FBI was aggressively investigating whether the two Muslim Russian Chechen bombers had acted with the connivance of Muslims from Russia's volatile North Caucasus region. Yet, more than 10 years after 9/11 [2] it appears everything possible is being done to conceal Saudi assistance to the 19 hijackers — 15 of whom were Saudi nationals."
