Americans suffer most from believing that there's literally nowhere else on Earth that even remotely approaches America-- imagine really believing that this, here, is the best that there is-- this corrupt empire is the best it gets, everything else is worse, even-- that's Hell.

"Russia? That's a shithole, garbage, a mafia gas station with nukes, I pity the Russians, they would be more free in America. China? That's a shithole, communism, slavery to authoritarians, completely lied to, poor, forced to repeat lies, surveilled, just awful. America is horrible & yet that's the best that it gets, everyone else has it even worse."

That's what Communism has that no other ideology has-- it's the recognition of, after all the evil in the world, the ultimate triumph of the good. Only Communists can look at Russia & China & say "You know what, we should learn from some of what they're doing actually, it seems to work better."

This is what cucks Rightoids eternally-- they have to place the fate of the entire human universe onto the shoulders of the garbage rightoids they have-- they have to admire Trump more than Xi Jinping, for instance-- or some hack like Millei, etc.

Communism is a necessary step to objectively grasping what are self-evident truths upon reflection-- the most important historical statesman living is Xi Jinping. Xi Jinping will be remembered much longer than Joe Biden, or Tony fuckin' Blinken. & that's because Good > Evil.

It's literally a psychodrama-- because American Exceptionalism is so deeply ingrained that it's the final thing to be lost in the intellect-- I think abandoning it is necessary for an authentic Patriotism, which is why American Exceptionalism exists even subconsciously in American leftoids

Everyone knows the sort of "social cost" it has in terms of people treating you as an enemy of the State for something like recognizing scientifically the superiority of the Chinese Economy in the year 2024. That's what keeps people from seeing what's in front of their eyes-- the social cost of decentering America as the fulcrum of the cosmic order.

It's not enough for Americans for America to be America, a place amongst places-- no-- America has to be the entire Universe-- America is the only place-- & the rest is just the trail it leaves through Time-- this is what is hardest to let go of for Americans.

In this way, it's entirely analogous to the late USSR-- which had to claim that it's quality of life was superior to America's (when it wasn't)-- this is what people are waking up to now-- & this is how empire's end, when they stop being believed to be the center of the cosmos.
