

John Jackman

@JenksJackman

The American Revolution Was A Proto-Communist Revolution

The defining feature and objective result of the American Revolution was a widening of democracy. The first and most revolutionary change was in the field of basic theory, where in 1776, the Provincial Congress adopted a resolution that all governments in the colonies exercising authority under the British Crown should be suppressed, and that "all the powers of government be exerted under the authority of the people of the colonies."

John Adams described this as "the most important resolution that was ever taken in America." The foreign, superintending power that had authority of governance over the colonies was wiped out by independence, and was replaced by a new central government based in America.

While it was only a beginning, a start was made in the direction of ending the property qualification for voting and office holding, a few states established what amounted to manhood suffrage, and some took steps toward representation based on the population.

But attacks against this legacy have persisted, and the same forces that once oppressed America with undemocratic and foreign controls have consistently tried to reassert themselves.

The confederate attempt to break America in two and maintain slavery was supported and financed by British aristocracy and financial elites.

The Nazi scourge and attempts to coup the popular and democratic FDR administration were supported by foreign finance capital looking to prey upon the American people.

NATO and the development of the deep-state post WW2 were counter-revolutionary efforts to subvert and roll back the sovereignty of the American people over their government.

Today, the American people are once again controlled counter-revolutionaries in the form of international finance capital, multi-national banks, corporate monopolies, and foreign lobbying power.

These forces have unchecked power and influence, and they have taken root in our current political system like a terminal cancer. It's given us political standard-bearers like the Clintons' and Bushs' whose primary purpose is to sell-out the American people.

The sovereign interests of American communities are being steamrolled by authorities with no connection or stake in the American people and the well-being of American civic-society. More insultingly, these parasites have tried to co-opt the symbols and true legacy of our American democracy.

As Communists, our purpose is to yank back the democratic American legacy from these anti-American vultures, and liberate America once again by bridging the revolutionary inheritance of 1776 with our current struggle and our fight for a better future.

To the American people, POWER.

12:41 PM · Apr 3, 2024 · 529 Views