

Edward Snowden accuses US of illegal, aggressive campaign

Whistleblower uses first public appearance since surveillance leaks to defend decision and praise states which offered asylum

Alec Luhn in Moscow and Miriam Elder
The Guardian, Friday 12 July 2013 14.16 EDT

Edward Snowden (centre) gives a news conference at Sheremetyevo airport in Moscow with human rights activists. Photograph: Itar-Tass/Corbis

The American whistleblower Edward Snowden has accused the US of waging a campaign of "historically disproportionate aggression" against him during an extraordinary meeting with human rights activists and Russian officials at the Moscow airport where he has been trapped since 23 June.

In his first appearance since disclosing his identity in the Guardian last month, Snowden insisted he had no regrets and had made a "moral decision" to leak dozens of secret documents outlining US surveillance programmes. He also announced he would apply for political asylum from the Kremlin and appealed to those present for help in leaving the airport.

The US has lobbied governments around the world to refuse entry to Snowden and has invalidated his US passport.

Last week, a plane carrying the Bolivian president, Evo Morales, was grounded in Vienna after several European countries blocked their airspace amid suspicions that Snowden was on board.

'The government and intelligence services of the United States of America have attempted to make an example of me, a warning to all others who might speak out as I have,' Snowden said. 'I have been made stateless and hounded for my act of political expression.'

The White House spokesman, Jay Carney, accused Russia of 'providing a propaganda platform' for Snowden, which 'runs counter to the Russian government's previous declarations of Russia's neutrality'.

'It's also incompatible with Russian assurances that they do not want Mr Snowden to further damage US interests,' Carney said during a White House briefing.

The US president, Barack Obama, was scheduled to speak to his Russian counterpart, Vladimir Putin, by telephone on Friday evening.

Snowden appeared relaxed and in good spirits in camera-phone footage posted on the website of the Russian tabloid newspaper LifeNews. At one point, as he was assailing the US for attempting to 'legitimise an illegal affair', an airport announcement broke in. He smiled: 'I've heard this many times'.

Snowden said he would request asylum in Russia until he was permitted to travel to Latin America. Venezuela has offered him political asylum but he remains unable to travel there without travel documents.

Snowden praised Venezuela, as well as Russia, Bolivia, Nicaragua and Ecuador for 'being the first to stand against human rights violations carried out by the powerful rather than the powerless' and for 'refusing to compromise their principles in the face of intimidation'.

Russia has one of the world's poorest reputations for human rights. In the past week alone, it brought two big decisions against its main whistleblowers: the lawyer Sergei Magnitsky was found posthumously guilty of committing tax fraud, while a judge announced he would soon issue a verdict against the corruption activist Alexei Navalny.

Several officials close to the Kremlin attended Friday's 5pm meeting at Sheremetyevo, including Vyacheslav Nikonov, an MP with Putin's United Russia party, and Vladimir Lukin, Putin's human rights ombudsman. Nikonov said he had asked Snowden how he was enjoying his time in Russia. 'He laughed – and said, it's safe here," Nikonov said.

Earlier this month, Snowden withdrew a request for asylum in Russia, a move the Kremlin explained by saying he had not agreed with terms set out by Putin calling on him to "stop bringing harm to our American partners". According to attendees, Snowden argued that his leaks were serving, rather than harming, the American people. "He said he doesn't want to bring harm to the United States and sees himself as a law-abiding citizen and a patriot," Nikonov said.

Sergei Naryshkin, speaker of the Duma and a close Putin ally, said Russia should grant Snowden asylum.

Nikonov and other attendees, including Tanya Lokshina of Human Rights Watch and Sergei Nikitin of Amnesty International, were swarmed by journalists as they arrived at Sheremetyevo. Correspondents mobbed each of the activist invitees in turn as they made their way toward an airport employee holding a sign reading "G9", previously identified in Snowden's invitation email as the marker that would lead them to Snowden.

Lokshina said the US embassy had contacted her en route to the airport urging her to tell Snowden that the US position was that "he is not a human rights defender, he is not a whistleblower, and that he violated the law and should be held responsible". She said she told Snowden, who responded that "he understands that the US authorities look at the situation in that way, but he completely disagrees with that approach".

The horde followed the airport employee upstairs, with journalists running up downward escalators to get ahead, and the invitees were ushered through a service door guarded by police and into a hallway with a metal detector. Lokshina later said that they did not undergo any security checks and were only asked to not video the event.

The atmosphere was tense as journalists crowded to get footage and quotes after they emerged from the 45-minute meeting. At least one fistfight erupted between two cameramen who punched each other in the ribs.

Friday's proceedings left little doubt that the Russian authorities were actively involved in Snowden's stay at Sheremetyevo. Airport staff organised and conducted the event, and order was kept by a small cadre of police officers. Attendees said the meeting was watched over by men in suits, whom Nikitin said looked like government operatives: "I'm no expert, but if a man in a tie is standing there with a military bearing and a serviceman's expression, who is he, a school teacher?"

Nikonov, the Kremlin-friendly MP, agreed: "I think that he [Snowden] has guards, given the circumstances."

Russia has denied any involvement in Snowden's plight and continues to insist he is not on Russian territory since he has not crossed the border at Sheremetyevo. Snowden stressed in his statement that he "did not partner with any foreign government to guarantee my safety Instead, I took what I knew to the public, so what affects all of us can be discussed by all of us in the light of day, and I asked the world for justice."

Attendees said Snowden looked mentally and physically healthy, despite weeks in the halls of Sheremetyevo.

"He smiled, he looked confident, he looked like he believes he's in the right," Nikonov said. "I can't say he impressed me as a well-fed young man, but he's never been very bulky. And he has a great haircut."

"He didn't joke, because he understands the seriousness of the situation."

Nikitin said: "He didn't look scared, he looked cheerful ... He smiled at my jokes, and although his face looked a little pale, you can understand why if a person is located the whole time within four walls."

Some attendees said Snowden appeared desperate to get out of the airport. "I got the feeling that after all this, he just wants to physically get out of these premises, and this is the only way to get out of them," Nikitin said.

Get the Guardian's daily US email

Our editors' picks for the day's top news and commentary delivered to your inbox each morning.

Sign up for the daily email

More from the Guardian

What's this?

Confused bride exposes sham marriage plot after forgetting groom's name 11 Jul 2013

My boyfriend has a problem with my vibrator 07 Jul 2013

Irn-Bru 'push-up bra' ad cleared despite more than 170 complaints 10 Jul 2013

Edward Snowden renews Russia asylum bid in attempt to leave Moscow airport 12 Jul 2013

Edward Snowden caught in asylum catch-22 12 Jul 2013

More from around the web

What's this?

What Drove 70% of IT Managers to Server Virtualization? (Tech Page One)

Can an American Have Dual Citizenship? (eHow)

10 Extreme Bootstrapping Ideas (Newegg)

10 Things You Should Never Buy at Garage Sales (Reader's Digest)

7 Habits of Highly Frugal People (Money Ning)

7/12/13

Edward Snowden accuses US of illegal, aggressive campaign | World news | The Guar...