All the "IQ Discourse" doesn't take into account that above the median, IQ is diminishing returns-- elite midwits are the only people interested in just accumulating money & status for its own sake-- the highest IQ person I ever met was a "mentally ill" homeless person.

IQ is also correlated with executive function-- if you have really high executive function your basic principle is "leave me alone" & not wanting to have to follow orders. Lao Tzu was more high IQ than Confucius, & Confucius essentially admits this when he refuses the call to be emperor-- being emperor sucks, any extremely intelligent person would do everything to avoid that imposition on life. The highest IQ person in the world probably plays video games all day & schemes the disability system. The only people interested in public acclaim in the form of status & money are midwits.

This "mentally ill" homeless person got free money from the government to spend all day doing whatever he wanted to do, which was mostly reading & playing RTS games on his laptop. This was in a homeless shelter in Cambridge MA.

All his meals were paid for, he had a place to sleep, he had his laptop & he did whatever he felt like all day & laughed at everyone else. To put it this way "he was perpetually traveling and staying in hostels, didn't need a job"-- this is how you'd have to explain the appeal to midwits. "He was freer than either of us."

Oh wow you're so high IQ that you passed your LSATs & then took out debt to become a lawyer & now you're a corporate lawyer-- this homeless guy took the LSATs for fun & went back to playing Starcraft.

Nikola Tesla was more interested in his pigeons than in money or status. That's what actually "high IQ" looks like-- it doesn't look like "respectable normal high status wealthy" person-- it looks indistinguishable from "crazy homeless person."

That's the funny thing-- there's a bell curve, where it becomes difficult for the median to distinguish the poles-- is that person a genius or are they retarded? Hard to tell from the peak of mediocrity, where you're rewarded with status & wealth.

It's just funny to see "high IQ" associated with fucking JD Vance & other midwits like that these days. Oh wow he went to Yale, does that impress you fucking rubes? Yalies are retards. I know from experience, I have to have dinner with them.

The most "blackpilling" thing for midwits would be to enter the hallowed halls of their "elite high iq" conceptions of institutions. I was talking to a multimillionaire Silicon Valley wife the other day & her husband just watches Star Wars movies in his man cave.

Meanwhile, when I worked on an assembly line packaging fucking desserts there was this grad school drop out "bohemian" guy & we'd talk about Heidegger while packaging pies. His other job was working at a used book store. He was better read than any "elite" person I've met since.

What is it that these people in the "IQ" discourse really want? They want money & status. They wouldn't want "IQ" if it didn't provide them either of those things or hampered it.
