In the ever-shifting geopolitical landscape of the twenty-first century, marked by the decline of unipolar dominance and the emergence of a multipolar world, a novel and intriguing political movement has emerged: MAGA (“Make America Great Again”) Communism. Jackson Hinkle is a prominent figure in this movement, surpassing notable personalities like Elon Musk in digital influence, a testament to the new currents in mediatic discourse and societal reach.

MAGA Communism represents a synthesis of seemingly disparate elements: Marxist thought and American patriotism. This fusion, far from being a mere theoretical juxtaposition, is a direct response to the complex realities of the contemporary global order, challenging the prevailing binaries. Unlike traditional Marxist movements, MAGA Communism does not alienate the patriotic sentiments of the American populace. Instead, it embraces these sentiments, redefining patriotism in a manner that is inclusive of the working class and its struggles.

At its core, MAGA Communism is firmly anti-colonialist. It harkens back to Vladimir Lenin's incisive analysis of imperialism as a critical phase in the capitalist system, where he stated, "Imperialism is capitalism in that stage of development in which the dominance of monopolies and finance capital is established." This perspective resonates deeply with MAGA Communism, as it underscores the exploitative nature of modern imperialism, not merely as a geopolitical strategy but as an extension of capitalist economic practices.

MAGA Communism articulates a comprehensive critique of globalism. It aligns with the sentiments of former (and possibly future) US President Donald Trump, who once remarked, "Globalization has made the financial elite who donate to politicians very wealthy. But it has left millions of our workers with nothing but poverty and heartache." This is an expression of the belief that globalist policies undermine national sovereignty and contribute to the erosion of local cultures and economies. MAGA Communism seeks to dismantle the prevailing structures that perpetuate the globalist conditions, advocating a world order that respects the sovereignty of nations and promotes a true multipolar balance of power.

A critical aspect of MAGA Communism is its perspective on elite self-aggrandizement and the accompanying lack of social benefits for the poor in the United States. The movement critiques the existing economic system, which disproportionately favors the wealthy elite while neglecting the needs of the working class. This critique is rooted in Marxist analysis, emphasizing the class struggle and the animalistic nature inherent in the capitalist system.

MAGA Communism also addresses the issue of immigration, viewing it through the lens of anti-globalism and national sovereignty. The movement perceives unchecked immigration as a tool used by globalist elites to undermine national identities and economies, thus exacerbating social and economic issues within countries. This stance is intertwined with the movement's emphasis on maintaining and protecting national identity and culture.
