Hudson says "It's not a Political Problem. A Political Problem is something that normal people can have an opinion about, like what color shirt a politician should wear. What we're facing isn't a political, for that reason, but it's also not a problem, because it doesn't have a solution short of revolution. It's a quandary."

I will note that he says that the first priority of any revolutionary movement in America is to absolutely destroy the Democratic Party & in order to do that the Republican Party would necessarily become the instrument of its destruction.

What can you do for the revolution? At minimum, don't be a Democrat.

At the end of the Q&A he's asked "But do we need an industrial working class?" -- Hudson says "Yes, the problem is that we don't have one anymore." So, actually, my positions are entirely backed up by the leading economist of the entire fucking world & everyone else is wrong.

Hudson spends a lot of time in this Q&A describing why "Marxists" are mostly fucking retarded-- because they take the fundamental contradiction to be "Employers & Employed" -- but this is retarded, & it's so retarded that it makes them entirely retarded.

Productive / unproductive labor is a more fundamental contradiction in this stage of Super-Imperialism. When the revolution comes, it won't be to restore your 401k benefits that the Starbucks Barista's Union negotiated on your behalf-- because Starbucks won't exist anymore.

R.Cam 🦋🥚 @Logo_Daedalus · Nov 26, 2023

I get tired of repeating myself because it doesn't make retards less retarded. The only way to actually change someone's mind is to painstakingly engage in socratic inquiry until they make themselves realize that they are retarded. Rhetoric is a waste of time.

Thankfully the geopolitical situation is unfolding rationally & Americans will be some of the last people to fully understand the collapse that we're living through.

Hudson actually straight up says that most "Marxist" jibber jabber is funded by banks in order to make marxism in its entirety seem retarded.
