

Issue: December 22, 2022

Scott Adams announces switch to Rumble for live streams after YouTube demonetization

More people are ditching YouTube for its censorship tactics.

By Cindy Harper    Posted 1:57 pm

Share

If you're tired of censorship, cancel culture, and the erosion of privacy and civil liberties subscribe to Reclaim The Net.

Dilbert creator and commentator Scott Adams has announced a switch to Rumble after having a live stream demonetized by YouTube.

“YouTube demonetized my live stream yesterday for no reason. I will be migrating to #Rumble for the live shows as soon as I can figure out which tech works best for that.”

Scott Adams

@ScottAdamsSays · Dec 21

#YouTube demonetized my live stream yesterday for no reason. I will be migrating to #Rumble for the live shows as soon as I can figure out which tech works best for that.

 209

 253

 2,395

Scott Adams

@ScottAdamsSays

Disclosure: I invested in the Locals startup that was acquired by Rumble and am now a stockholder.

Adams is one of many that are beginning to switch to using alternative platforms such as Rumble after being censored by the Big Tech giant.

It's not the first time YouTube has censored Adams.

YouTube censored an episode of the Real Coffee podcast back in 2020. The episode was removed for violating YouTube's policy against disputing the outcome of the 2020 presidential election.

The removed episode was titled "Biden COVID Plan, Swalwell's Chinese Spy, Pelosi Still a Steaming Pile." Adams announced the censorship on Twitter, writing, "Google (YouTube) just shut me down."

"The video they deleted is no different from all of my other content. I assume they'll come for the other videos soon," Adams added.

Adams also added that he "invested in the Locals startup that was acquired by Rumble and [is] now a stockholder."

If you're tired of censorship, cancel culture, and the erosion of civil liberties subscribe to Reclaim The Net.