The NSA Already Collects All Email and Phone Call Content

July 5th, 2013 • 9:44 AM

Multiple sources say that the NSA already can and does collect and keep the content of domestic emails, telephone/cell phone calls, and skype communications — and that in fact one billion cell phone conversations are collected each day, despite repeated lying denials.

Greg Gordon of the McClatchey Newspapers reports in a July 3 article that FBI Director Robert Mueller informed the Senate in March 2011 that "technological improvements" enabled the FBI "to pull together past emails and future ones as they come in, so that it does not require an individualized search."

Gordon reports that a vast facility to hold this data is now being built in a valley south of Salt Lake City, Utah. Intelligence whistleblower Russ Tice says the Salt Lake City area facility is already operating and online. Multiple print sources reveal that one billion cell phone calls are being recorded every day and stored in powerful digital databases.

Security experts, including a former AT&T engineer, say that the NSA has tapped into fiber-optic cables carrying phone calls. Glenn Greenwald said in a speech over the weekend that an upcoming story will describe a classified document that "talks about how a brand-new technology enables the National Security Agency to redirect into its own repositories 1 billion cellphone calls every single day.... What we are really talking about here is a globalized system that prevents any form of electronic communication from taking place without it being stored and monitored by the National Security Agency," Greenwald said in a webcast to the Socialism Conference in Chicago.

This information is corroborated by former intelligence agent Russell Tice — who worked for multiple American intelligence agencies including the Air Force, Defense Intelligence Agency, NSA, and Office of Naval Intelligence — in a June 19, 2013 Podcast #112 on boilingfrog.com. [1] In that interview, Tice explains that the FBI did not have the needed powerful processing capability and power capacity until recent upgrades, including a recent $6 billion upgrade at an intelligence center in Ft. Meade, Md. Now, Tice says, every domestic communication is word-for-word contained in the database in Utah.
