Where Did My Country Go?

Paul Craig Roberts

As an American who grew up in the 1940s and 1950s I wonder what became of my country. We were a homogeneous Christian people proud of our history. We were unified with a common language, prayer in public schools, and monuments to dead white men. We were safe in our homes and schools, in our streets, and on public transportation. A five-year old child could walk to school safely. Public schools were good. Teachers had degrees in the subjects they taught, not in something called education. We looked to the future with optimism.

What happened to my country? It was torn apart by bitchy white liberals, by the influence of Jewish Marxists known as the Frankfurt School, and by the 1965 immigration act that turned the United States into a Tower of Babel. These developments launched the denunciation and "unmasking" that branded America as "racist," "exploitative," and "misogynist." Today our history is a compendium of crimes as the New York Times 1619 Project, now taught in public schools, illustrates.

Restitution set in, with the result being that white American citizens, especially heterosexual white males, have become second class citizens against whom it is legal to discriminate in university admissions, hiring, and promotion. White students and employees are also required to be re-educated in "sensitivity training," but no other race has to be sensitive toward white people.

The family is routinely invaded by the state, especially the neo-Nazi Child Protective Services empowered to seize children from parents on accusation alone.

In the 1940s and 1950s no one would have tolerated any of this. What became of these Americans?

If it had happened all at once, it would have been stopped. But it happened gradually over time, with various wars and economic crises to pull people together and perpetuate the image of unity and constitutional principles. July 4 celebrations served the same purpose.

The destruction of America was an incremental process. As each decade passed a bit more of America eroded until today little is left.

In less than two years from February 2021 to October 2022, President Biden allowed 1.4 million immigrant-invaders to walk across the US border with Mexico. These immigrant-invaders were given work permits while they await their green cards giving permanent residency. The governor of California, Gavin Newsom, has just signed a law passed by the California legislature that allows these non-citizens to be employed as local, county, and state police officers empowered to arrest American citizens.

How far our country has collapsed! An immigrant-invader can walk across the border, get a job as a police officer, and arrest you, especially if you are a Trump supporter who wanted a wall built to keep him out.

This is bad, but it gets worse. Increasingly I see reports that Democrat states, such as California and New York, are allowing non-citizens to vote in elections. As far as I can tell the voting is limited to local elections, as the blue cities cannot override state and federal voting requirements. But the same collapse that results in non-citizens voting in local elections will manifest itself, eventually legally, not just fraudulently as present, in state and federal elections.

So, what does it mean any longer to be an American citizen? The Democrats permit millions of people to come into your country where they displace you by exercising your rights of citizenship without being citizens.

Don't expect white leadership to do anything about it. White leadership has collapsed across the board in every country. Take something as simple as the Brownies, the female equivalent of the Cub Scouts, the organizations for younger kids before becoming Girl Scouts and Boy Scouts.

In Canada the Girl Guides (Girl Scouts in the US) has dropped the historic name "Brownies" as it is deemed "too racially divisive." <https://www.bbc.com/news/world-us-canada-64243976>

I have no idea of the historical origin of "Brownies." What is offensive about "Brownies?" Does it imply what white girls are describing themselves as black and thus offending blacks. If all whites are racist, as the dogma goes, then why would white racist girls call themselves brown? Will the karate rank of brown belt have to go also?

I don't know the answer to this mystery. What is obvious, however, is the collapse of the Girl Guides leadership in the face of a non-problem. What explains this collapse except the complete absence of white confidence?

People without racial confidence, which is what most white people are today, are a people whose future is extinction.
